WILL/ The+ adj

ONE DAY, I WILL

- Wentworth: One day, if you win the lottery, if you become a millionaire... What will you do? Please tell me what you will do!
- Sarah: What I will do... I already know. I will purchase a condo and travel around the world.
- Wentworth: Will you help a cause? What about your family?
- Sarah: If I am a millionaire, I will help my family obviously, especially my parents and one of my cousins. I will help my best friend too. Then, I will give some money to charities as well.
- Wentworth: What else will you do?
- Sarah: I will do nothing else. I will only help my close family and friends, to a certain extent.
- Wentworth: Why?
- Sarah: In the meantime, I will travel the world. Afterwards, if I am still a millionaire, I will help organizations who help the poor and the homeless. There are too many: here, in my country and overseas. It is so sad
- Wentworth: You will make a difference if you decide to help. You can fund local organizations that provide food and shelter for the poor or the underprivileged. Your money can help here, or abroad. In any case, it will be a good deed.
- Sarah: I will definitely help a local organization that I know. They fight against illiteracy. I sometimes volunteer for the paperwork there. I think it is important to support the young, with their education. This organization is brilliant because they gather the old and the young: the old help the young, and the young communicate with the old. When I say 'old', the age range is 35-85 years old. The young is 10 to 35-39 because there are foreigners who do not speak properly and they come there to learn. Mothers bring snacks, everyone drinks tea or coffee. In a very friendly atmosphere. It is really nice.
- Wentworth: I suddenly feel like subscribing to an organization. Next!

Grammar

MUST

In English, MUST is a modal. It is the modal for obligation. We use MUST at the present tense only.

1) in positive statements

We use MUST when we express obligation.

Example: You must turn left (= it is necessary for you to turn left)

Impersonal equivalents are:

It is necessary (to speak)

It is mandatory (to sign here)

2) in negative statements

We use MUST in negative statements to refer to a ban

Example: You must not smoke (it is forbidden for you to speak)

Impersonal equivalents are:

It is not allowed (to smoke here)

It is forbidden (to smoke here)
